There's no group that is looked to more during times of crisis than our critical infrastructure entities. However, what happens when these very entities themselves have also been damaged by floodwaters, communication outages, power outages, and other problems that hinder their response time? Government entities, such as First Responders and other essential workers, are the backbone of their communities and are relied upon for critical support after a disaster. Timing is of the essence when getting these facilities back up and running, and they need a partner they can count on to get the job done at a moment's notice.

COMPREHENSIVE SERVICES

Cotton Global Disaster Solutions (GDS) has a proven track record of helping governments at the Municipal, County, Parish, State and Federal level repair their operations at lightning speed so they can get back to serving their citizens as quickly as possible. For 25 years, Cotton GDS has helped government agencies by providing assessment information, emergency remediation, temporary roofing, emergency food services, power and construction repairs to bring these entities back to a pre-loss condition.

Cotton understands the need for confidentiality agreements and respects the sensitive nature of the work these agencies do. With around-the-clock turnkey business continuity services, your team will have everything they need to continue serving the community, despite property loss or damage. With offices throughout the United States, and U.S. territories within the Caribbean, Cotton GDS's team of first responders and equipment are available 24/7 and can respond to a disaster quickly and efficiently.
