HEALTH HIGHLIGHTS

April is . . .

National Autism Acceptance Month

April is Autism Acceptance Month. The recognition raises awareness about autism acceptance and promotes inclusion and connectedness for people with autism.

Social and community support can help people with autism achieve optimal health and reach their full potential. CDC promotes early identification and provides essential data on autism to inform programs and policies that support children with autism and their families. CDC activities include surveillance and monitoring, educational materials and resources, and sharing best practices with state, territorial, and national partners.

CDC activities to help understand and help children and families with autism:

Autism and Developmental Disabilities Monitoring (ADDM):

The autism and developmental disabilities monitoring (ADDM) Network is the only collaborative network to track the number and characteristics of children with autism spectrum disorder (ASD) and other developmental disabilities in multiple communities throughout the United States.

Study to Explore Early Development (SEED):

CDC's Study to Explore Early Development (SEED) launched in 2007 to help us learn more about autism in preschool-aged children. SEED is one of the largest studies of young children, aged 2-5 years, with ASD in the United States. It looks at their risk factors for ASD, developmental characteristics, and health and healthcare needs. The information collected through SEED enables researchers to study potential risk factors for ASD and other developmental disabilities.

Learn the Signs. Act Early. (LTSAE):

CDC's Learn the Signs. Act early. (LTSAE) program improves early identifications of children with developmental delays and disabilities, such as autism, by promoting parent-engaged developmental monitoring and facilitating early action on concerns. LTSAE provides free checklists, a mobile app, and other resources to help parents track their child's developmental milestones and share concerns with their child's doctor.
